2004 Sloan Public Service Awards

FUND FOR THE CITY OF NEW YORK

2004 Sloan Public Service Award

WINNERS

Neil Berman

Larry Gould

Rolanda Pyle

Myriam Sarachik

Patrick Too

Ellie Weiss and Tabari Z. Bomani

For 31 years the Fund for the City of New York's Public Service Awards Program has honored outstanding civil servants whose work performance and commitment to the public transcend not merely the ordinary but the extraordinary — day after day and year after year. In honoring these winners, we also acknowledge the contributions of the many thousands of dedicated public servants who, with integrity and devotion, perform the work that keeps this complex city running.

This year's winners, and the 194 winners from previous years, were selected from among more than 250,000 eligible workers in the mayoral agencies, the Transit and Housing Authorities, the Health and Hospitals Corporation, The City University of New York, district attorneys' offices and the public libraries.

Winners come from all levels and ranks of New York City's government.

Sloan Public Service Award Winners demonstrate some or all of the following: extraordinary service delivered with ingenuity, energy and compassion – an expression of commitment far beyond the call of duty; responsiveness to public needs by cutting through red tape or developing more effective methods of service delivery; outstanding and reliable performance both under the pressures of daily routine and in times of crisis; willingness to take risks, if that is what is needed, to improve services or correct abuses or inequities; the ability to adapt to change and provide a continued high standard of service to the public; and upholding the public interest amidst competing interests, pressures and demands.

The Fund for the City of New York is grateful to the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation for its support of this program for the past 19 years.

“Neil Berman’s contract management system is better than anything we saw in our national search. It is being applied to all the City’s human services programs.”

NEIL BERMAN

Assistant Commissioner, Information Technology, Department of Youth and Community Development (DYCD)

Neil Berman's agency serves youth and adults, families and communities. Its programs range from helping improve literacy, gaining citizenship and obtaining summer employment to administering after-school and out-of-school time programs. These services are delivered by community-based organizations that have 1,900 contracts with DYCD costing $169.3 million.

Thanks to Mr. Berman's efforts, the City is able to keep track of and manage every step of every DYCD human service contract: announcement of the Request for Proposals, the award, service delivery milestones, payments due and issued, and completion. His contract management system saves countless hours of duplicate data entry and ensures uniform information for all projects. It contains rigorous quality controls and supports accountability by identifying parties responsible at each point of data entry. The system replaced an uncoordinated amalgam of manual and electronic procedures that were originally housed in two different agencies.

This model large-scale technology innovation is one of many solutions Mr. Berman has introduced during his 19 years of government service in four agencies. He has improved information about and control and quality of foster care, homeless services and other programs. Self-taught, he has built a reputation as a problem solver and successful manager of complex, difficult, urgent and high profile projects, including disaster recovery plans. He seeks challenges in finding new and better ways to help the City get its work done.

"He puts the needs of the riding public at the top of his list, aiming to make subway and bus service in New York the best in the world"

LARRY GOULD

Senior Director, Operations Analysis, New York City Transit (TA)

Since Larry Gould came to the TA 23 years ago, when a major multi-year capital program was launched to overcome deterioration of the mass transit system resulting from years of deferred maintenance, he has been part of the turnaround of the largest city transportation system in the world.

He and his staff — some of whom he recruits from TA field positions and then trains to be analysts — develop and implement strategies to ensure that $3 billion a year in capital funding is used effectively. Their work involves developing route diversions while construction projects are in progress and assuring the best possible service all year long by anticipating and responding to labor disputes, blackouts, terrorist attacks and planning for special events. Permission for access to subway tracks (5,000 a year) for capital improvement, maintenance and emergencies is issued in his office. He attends community meetings to listen to the public's concerns. He works with public information staff to produce announcements and maps about service changes. He is at the Subway Control Center for every emergency and is the TA's liaison to the City's emergency operations.

Mr. Gould has uncanny knowledge of New York City's entire transportation network and the ability to address the complex issues and competing interests involved in running and improving the City's buses and subways. A master of technical and technological issues, budgetary and personnel nuances, capital financing, public and community relations, project management, inter- and intra- agency collaboration and dispute resolution, he is involved in virtually every solution and new initiative to improve TA performance and operations.

"She is totally committed; knows the issues inside and out and has helped put the needs of caregiving grandparents on the national map."

ROLANDA PYLE

Director, Grandparent Resource Center, Department for the Aging

In 1995 the Department for the Aging asked Rolanda Pyle, a trained social worker, to lead the nation's first municipally run resource center for caregiving grandparents - the Grandparent Resource Center. Almost 84,000 New Yorkers care for their grandchildren, because of loss or circumstances such as parental drug addiction or incarceration. The role is unexpected, stress-laden and draining. Many of the grandparents are poor and in poor health; yet social service agencies often lack awareness of their needs. With a budget of just $300,000, the Center provides this essential and fragile group with a range of programs, services, and referrals to community-based agencies. The Center also educates and supports the community organizations to develop and expand their services for grandparents.

Ms. Pyle's own grandmother became the maternal nurturer in her life when Ms. Pyle was a young child. "My memories of my grandmother inspire me to work harder with the grandparents I see." She engages herself personally in the lives of about 400 seniors, helping them to receive financial aid, housing, or other entitlements for which they qualify and providing them with hope. She established an information and referral hotline; oversees support groups and has trained over 700 people who are interested in becoming support group leaders, established a Grandparents Recognition Day Celebration and toy drives.

Ms. Pyle has created a national platform for the issue and is devising quiet but firm ways to bend, cajole, and encourage the system into providing a fairer share of assistance.

*“She has blazed trails
as a scientist, researcher, teacher, mentor and humanitarian,”*

MYRIAM SARACHIK

Distinguished Professor of Physics, The City College of New York (CCNY). The City University of New York

Myriam Sarachik teaches Physics — even Introductory Physics to freshmen — and she conducts research. In fact, she is one of the world’s leading researchers in the field of condensed matter Physics, conducting experiments in her specially designed lab, with her undergraduate, graduate and “post doc” students and with scientists visiting from around the world. She seeks fundamental understanding, significant technological developments and the creation of new materials. She could do this research at highly endowed universities. She has chosen, however, for the past 40 years, to work and teach at CCNY, embodying CCNY’s mission to offer rigorous, world-class higher education to all, including immigrants and those who are economically underprivileged.

She changes the lives of students. A caring and generous mentor, she successfully encourages them to become scientists and inspires them to produce major discoveries, seed the technology of the future, “feel the excitement that comes with research and discovery” and help humanity. As a national leader she develops strategies to address the shortage of scientists and engineers, reaching out to high school students, women, minorities, collaborating with scientists in Africa and supporting dissident scientists working in oppressed nations.

She was accorded the title “Distinguished Professor” by her colleagues at CCNY for her superb teaching, scholarship and research. She has overcome many hurdles, including facing years of tyranny in Europe when she was a child, making her achievements and contributions all the more remarkable.

"He is a New York City treasure... the glue that holds the City's design initiatives together... the watchdog for preserving and creating the best open space possible."

PATRICK TOO

Principal Urban Designer, Department of City Planning

Patrick Too has worked as an urban designer for the City for 30 years, earning a reputation as the foremost and trusted expert in open space design and related zoning matters. Through his vast knowledge and training in architecture and urban design and his love for New York, he has influenced the creation of hospitable open spaces throughout the City, especially in the middle of busy Manhattan.

He reviews proposals from private developers to assure their compliance with his agency's guidelines — which he helped establish — for public open spaces, pedestrian and mass transit spaces and streetscapes. He influences the design of major City planning projects. He has been involved in the design of many plazas, a preservation plan for the Theater District, transit and land use around Grand Central Station, Lincoln Center zoning, planning for Lower Manhattan redevelopment and for Midtown development, neighborhood preservation for Little Italy, plans for the Second Avenue subway, for Columbus Circle and for landmarked buildings such as Carnegie Hall.

He works with neighborhood groups and some of the world's leading builders, architects and landscapers, balancing the multiple objectives of retaining and enhancing neighborhood identity, encouraging new developments, and improving urban design. Spurning opportunities to move into a management position or to the private sector, he says, "This is the most meaningful work that I could do. I see my job as helping the public feel comfortable in their city. It gives me great joy."

"When others told us to take our GEDs, to just get a job or to simply give up, Tabari and Ellie said: 'Ignore them. You can do it.'"

ELLIE WEISS and TABARI Z. BOMANI

Teachers, Bushwick Outreach Center, Department of Education

Bushwick Outreach Center is an alternative high school for students 17 - 21 years old who were unsuccessful in their previous schools. It admits any student with a fifth-grade reading level and a commitment to hard work. Students must fulfill requirements for their high school diplomas, including passing Regents' exams. The school is located on the third floor of a junior high school where they have 13 classrooms for their program, 350 students and 18 teachers.

When Ms. Weiss came to Bushwick Outreach 18 years ago she wanted to introduce a new culture of high expectations and quality education for every student, although the prevailing feeling was that the students could achieve no more than a General Education Diploma and that higher standards would set them up for failure. Ellie Weiss decided to try anyway and offered new elective courses, which were popular and successful. She was a lone voice however, until, four years later, when Tabari Bomani arrived. Mr. Bomani says: "A lot of what I learned was based on her early struggle here and very few things that I have accomplished since could have been done without her. I would be a voice in the wilderness." Ms. Weiss describes Mr. Bomani as the "heart, soul and motor" of Bushwick Outreach. Indeed, the reciprocal relationship they have is stunning and they each describe it with clarity, warmth and generosity.

These two teachers are determined to help their students succeed, not only in school, but in the future. Mr. Bomani challenges his students to go beyond what comes easily, pushing them to articulate ever more complex thoughts, reason carefully and develop a love of learning. Students describe him as joyful and energetic and they appreciate all he does to involve them in his rigorous social studies and history classes. His colleagues say that he never quits trying to help a student and that he sets the standard for what all teachers should do.

Ellie Weiss does not allow students to fall behind in her classes. She helped establish and enforces a code of conduct — come to class on time; no walkman, phones, beepers; no sitting in the back of the room, no fighting, no weapons. The students respect it and her. They say that she makes them want to learn because she makes her history classes so interesting and puts so much effort into them. They believe her when she says that she wants for them what she wants for her own child — nothing less.

Together Ms. Weiss and Mr. Bomani introduced college counseling sessions. They have helped transform the school from the last educational environment their students would ever be in, to the first of many serious educational challenges, helping hundreds of students get into four-year institutions of higher learning. Bushwick Outreach now sends 65-75 percent of its graduates on to colleges or universities.

Sloan Public Service Awards Selection Process

All employees of mayoral agencies, the Transit and Housing Authorities, the Health and Hospitals Corporation, The City University of New York, district attorneys' offices and the public libraries are eligible for consideration for a Sloan Public Service Award. The emphasis is on individuals who have made a career of public service.

The Fund for the City of New York welcomes nominations. To nominate a person, provide a description of the candidate, including significant career information, the particular achievements that occasion the nomination and the qualities the nominee embodies. Names go into a reserve pool, and each nominee is reviewed in due course. The pool is a continuing one so that a recommendation, once made, need not be renewed. Nominations should be sent to Barbara J. Cohn Berman, Vice President, Fund for the City of New York.

The names of City employees who emerge with the strongest recommendations are submitted to the Selection Panel, an independent group of citizens picked on the basis of their standing in the community and their knowledge of government. In choosing the winners, panel members are guided by profiles of each nominee, descriptions of the contributions made and their own evaluation.

Alfred P. Sloan Foundation

The Alfred P. Sloan Foundation is a philanthropic nonprofit institution established by Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., in 1934. Its main programs involve science and technology, standard of living and economic performance, education and careers in science and technology, selected national issues and a civic program. The Sloan Public Service Awards of the Fund for the City of New York has been part of its civic program since 1985.

Fund for the City of New York

The Fund for the City of New York is a private operating foundation launched by the Ford Foundation in 1968 with the mandate to improve the quality of life for all New Yorkers. The Fund achieves this mission by being responsive to the problems of New York City and to opportunities to improve the performance of its government and nonprofit organizations. Its three strategic initiatives are the Center on Municipal Government Performance, Youth Development Institute and the Center for Internet Innovation/E-Community Connect. These core programs include the Cash Flow Loan Program, the Fund's Incubator Project, Nonprofit Computer Center and Management and Technology Assistance.
